

BACK OF THE CLASS

8.31.03

4:30pm

In life you sit at the back of the class past by the last, new math you can't pass yet always ready to show yo' ass, alas, shame overtakes you fast you dull your pain through daydreams of cash yes - just one big stash - yes - just one big lick and you'll make 'em all sick, quick, so to the illusion you stick just the same - chaos you claim abdicating your name for a chance at the game your spirit you maim fame... forever just beyond reach you're called upfront now to teach your chance for all to see - more importantly for you to show that you do know - dormant seeds once planted eventually can grow to the front you now confidently go... walk that walk... talk that talk... magic wand is the chalk... the teacher you balk just about to bust the convention and open the door to the dynamic dimension...
Oh SHIT! did I forget to mention that in the back of the class they don't pay attention and now that new math is wippin' that ass like staring into the looking glass although easily over 6' tall you're feelin' real small ... tryin' to stall... shrinking while you crawl for you can't save both face and ass
- as you reclaim your seat at the back of the class.